Revisiting Streatham's Theatrical Heritage
Tuesday 13th August
7pm for 7.30pm
an Illustrated talk by Liz Burton

"Let me tell you about some of the vanished buildings and forgotten personalities that helped to create Streatham's Theatrical Heritage!" Liz Burton - speaker

About Liz

I've always had a passion for local and social history. I've been involved in theatre on and off since I was a child. I've appeared in many shows and been part of the production team for many others, often in charge of costume. The production I'm most proud of is the site-specific version of Hamlet which STC performed in St. Leonard's church last September, and which I adapted and directed. After around 30 years as a writer of software user manuals and training courses I now call myself a (generally) non-fiction writer. I conducted many of the interviews on which STC's Playing with Sugar was based, and helped to dramatised some of the stories. I also wrote the guides' script for our tours of Streatham Hill Theatre, a building I love very much. I've always had a passion for local and social history.

About the workshop

When a group of us got together at a New Year's Eve party to see in 2013 and decided to start a theatre company to 'put theatre into StheatreM', it was with the distinct feeling that Streatham was a bit of a theatrical wasteland, with everyone looking to the West End for entertainment. This certainly isn't the case now, nor was it in the past. Streatham's history as a thriving south London urban community is short but eventful, and Streatham has always had strong links with both professional and amateur theatre.
